

Antrim rezoning

(Continued from Page 1)

housing and would prevent other multi-family development which might be injurious to the character, appearance and welfare of the town. The Board would likely be prepared to present an Elderly Housing Provision to voters this year upon completion of the Master Plan. In the meantime, they recommend a vote on the proposed rezoning this day.

In Peterborough, the group wants to put a complex of 40 to 60 apartments on Mercer Ave., which requires two changes: rezoning the land, and changing the town rule on density from four to eight units per acre.

The planners, so far, have not taken an official position on either article, but public reaction at hearings has not been favorable.

By law, a town must also pass a general resolution in favor of

Antrim planners oppose rezoning

Antrim's planning board has decided not to favor a planned elderly housing complex on Aiken St.

Francis Chapman, acting as agent for a Boston group seeking to build 50 units of elderly housing on Aiken St. in the hamlet of Antrim, said the board several said that there is a great need for it.

The planners' objections were to the wording of the article, and to the failure of the developers to consult the board ahead of time.

A Master Plan for Antrim is being prepared, and should be ready later this year.

The planners said that Mr. Chapman had not consulted the board ahead of time.

Antrim rezoning

(Continued from Page 1)

housing and would prevent other multi-family development which might be injurious to the character, appearance and welfare of the town. The Board would likely be prepared to present an Elderly Housing Provision to voters this year upon completion of the Master Plan. In the meantime, they recommend a "no" vote on the proposed changes on election day.

Mr. Chapman and his clients, Messrs. Industrial Development Co. and Mr. A. J. Still, are still waiting for

In Peterborough, the group wants to put a complex of 40 to 60 apartments on Mercer Ave., which requires two changes: rezoning the land, and changing the town rule on density from four to eight units per acre.

The planners, so far, have not taken an official position on either article, but public reaction at hearings has not been favorable.

By law, a town must also pass a general resolution in favor of subsidised housing for the elderly before any funds will be

Antrim planners oppose rezoning

Antrim's planning board has decided not to favor a planned elderly housing complex on Aiken St.

Francis Chapman, acting as agent for a Boston group seeking to build 30 units of subsidised elderly housing on the site, had petitioned Antrim for a warrant to change the town's zoning to allow multi-family housing on the site.

several said that there is a great need for it.

The planners' objections were to the wording of the article, and to the failure of the developers to consult the board ahead of time.

A Master Plan for Antrim is being prepared, and should be ready later this year.

The planners said that Mr. Chapman's article, if enacted, would open up the business