2 inmates admit killing spree in Seattle area

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A jail inmate has admitted killing "16 and possibly more" young women in the so-called Green River murders in Washington state last year, and police said they are investigating the claims, a newspaper reported.

Robert Matthias, 25, was quoted in today's editions of the San Francisco Chronicle as saying that he killed at least 16 women. In a separate interview, jail inmate Richard Carbone, 32, said he committed two murders with Matthias, and helped him kill nine others.

San Francisco police said they would question the men about the killings today.

Authorities have said they believe one man committed 26 Green River murders in the Seattle area since 1982, when several bodies were discovered in the river. Many victims were young prostitutes.

The two men, who are being held on charges unrelated to the Green River cases, said their victims were white teenage girls who were part of the street scene, the newspaper reported.

The inmates told the Chronicle they used badges and impersonated police officers when they lured the unsuspecting girls into their car. In the past, investigators have speculated the Green River killer might be using such a technique.

Bob Keppel, a Green River Task Force member who is a mass murder expert, refused to comment on the specifics of the investigation into Carbone and Matthias' assertions.

But Keppel said King County Police Detective Paul Smith was being sent to San Francisco to interview the inmates.

"Beyond that, we can't comment," he said in a telephone interview with the newspaper. "We'll see what these guys say."
